

Two unique acres of wild green space right in the heart of London, this innovative and internationally acclaimed reserve on the banks of the Regent's Canal is a place for both people and wildlife.

Camley Street Natural Park was created from an old coal yard back in 1984. It sits in the middle of King’s Cross, alongside the sparkling new Eurostar station at St. Pancras

It is popular with all kinds of people seeking respite from the buzz of the city around them. Individuals are welcome to drop in during opening hours.

The reserve has a visitor centre and is managed by the London Wildlife Trust
